Minutes of previous regular and special meetings were read and no motion adopted.

A communication from the manager of the Royal Bank of Canada, relative to the necessity of having to place a stop on the sidewalk, thereby causing an obstruction to the public which might entail injury to some person on persons. Moved by Coun. Robinson—That the letter from the manager of the Royal Bank be referred to Finance Committee to report on at a later date.—Carried.

A communication from McMurray Asphaltum & Oil Co was placed before the Council.

Moved by Coun. Clifton—That action on correspondence of McMurray Asphaltum & Oil Co be deferred until reply is received.—Carried.

Moved by Coun. Welch—That the Secretary be instructed to obtain an abstract of lots 14 and 15, block 1, and take other steps necessary to transfer these lots and also that portion of lot 13, to Calgary Power Company as per their letter of March 6th, 1929.—Carried.

A communication was read from the Edmonton Bulletin as follows:

RAIL DEVELOPMENT TO COST 4 MILLION

SEASON'S EXTENSIONS TO BE ON BIG SCALE, GENERAL MANAGER SAYS

EDMONTON.—New construction improvements to operate in the north country involve a programme requiring an expenditure of $4,426,510 this year, stated John W. Callaghan, general manager of the Northern Alberta Railways Company on Saturday morning.

For various improvements the outlay is placed at $2,076,520, which includes a big programme of maintenance work. The new construction is made up of 65 miles of railway extensions which are expected to cost $2,350,000.

The northern programme includes improved stations, the Father, Rycroft, Chalmers, Beaver Lodge, Hythe, Chalmers and Wainwright. There will also be repairs to engine houses, water tanks, station buildings, telegraph line, etc.

Additions will be made to the motive power and equipment, new loading platforms and stockpiles will be built, while there will also be considerable done in the way of roadway and bridge repairs.

Contracts for the new railway extensions will likely be awarded between April 15 and May 1, so that work can start just as soon as weather conditions permit.

OIL NEWS FROM THE WAINWRIGHT FIELD

(By W. A. Knowles)

The deal whereby Peninsula Petroleum Ltd. were to take over the assets of Wainwright Oil Ltd. is reported to have been mentioned by the share holders.

Arrangements are now being made whereby Peninsula will renew activities at Wainwright site. This work will be confined to the resumption of pumping work on No. 4, the placing of the refinery in operation and the carrying out of necessary work on No. 2 whereby the gas volume may be brought back to normal and the considerable amount of oil produced to be available in this hole will be brought to the surface. In the mean time work, with three shafts, is being carried on at Peninsular location, with excellently equipped standard drilling equipment. Some trouble was experienced in following the hole made, with casing, owing to cave-ins occasioned by quicksand. This strata is expected to be passed through at any time as the hole proceeds from the present 250 foot level.

Frank Stevens has returned from the East where he spent a month. He reports that several of the interests that had connections in the Wainwright field have been disturbed in their financing but that new changes are being opened to the extent that some of the larger financial interests are definitely directed this way and will likely carry out a program of development this summer.

The Bakwin Oil & Refining Company which holds large acreage in the vicinity of the Duluth Syndicate holdings and extending towards Birch Lake are to have, according to substantial report, their acreage developed by three very substantial oil concerns. One of these concerns mentioned is A.P. Con. and considerable credit might be given this from the fact that Gen. Victor W. Odlum C.B. who is vice-president of the Bakwin Oil & Refining Co. is also a director.

Commonwealth and Home Oil have been mentioned as intending to extend their activities to this field and likely in that same area.

Reports from the East would indicate that Senator Oil & Gas Co. is preparing for the opening of their Spring program here under their device now erected on the McIntee farm.

Reports from J. L. Daugherty of Onatko Oils indicate that the financing for resumption of work by this concern is meeting with success in Montreal and work should resume within the next few weeks on their well which is now down 1925 feet.

Many inquiries are being received by both Wainwright and Associated Refineries inquiring as to availability of distillate and fuel oil from various points throughout the west, to be used in tractor and other operations.

Spring so that there will be no difficulty in the capacity production of these plants being absorbed.

From inquiries being made, and reported arrangements under way, it is expected that practically all of the ten or twelve concerns now partly developed on their acreage here will resume and extend their activities by the advent of suitable weather, and road conditions.

Keeping its contents cool as it travels a truck recently has been placed in service that serves the same purpose in transporting perishables by road as the refrigerating cars do by railroad.

MAY INCLUDE OTHER ANIMALS AT DEPOT

In answer to an inquiry and suggestion by the Wainwright Board of Trade, a reply has been received from Sir Henry W. Thomson, K.B.E., informing that consideration is being given to the possibility of having the new glassed-in buffalo enclosure, to be erected shortly near the new depot here, of sufficient capacity to accommodate three or four representative animals from Wainwright National Park. Owing to the number of inquiries being received by the Board of Trade and the Parks Branch here concerning the perquisites of the Park here, it would be indicated that there are a large number of prospective tourists in sight for visits to the Buffalo Park during their summer itineraries.

COMPLETE FIGURES OF ALBERTA'S OIL OUTPUT

LAST YEAR'S PRODUCTION WAS OVER 12,000 BARRELS IN THE W.G.H.T. FIELD

Complete figures of oil production in Alberta during the month of December 1929, and for the calendar year have been compiled in the Department of the Interior from the reports of the operators. The record shows the tremendous increase in production during 1929 as compared with the previous year, last year's total reaching 999,152 barrels which is very close to the estimated 1,000,000 barrels. The 1929 production was more than double that of 1928 which yielded 489,152 barrels.

In the Wainwright field the production of crude oil reached a total of 12,332 barrels for the season.

FIRE DESTROYS OLD SPRINGER HOUSE

ANDERSON HOME ON 9TH AVE TOTALLY DESTROYED WITH CONTENTS

On Thursday evening last about ten o'clock the alarm of fire was given when it was discovered that the home of Mr. T. Anderson (formerly known as the Springer house) on Ninth Avenue west was well alight.

A fairly quick run was made by the fire ladders, but this was retarded by a group of firemen by the back of the melted and frozen streets. In fact so bad was the trip that Mr. V. Walton while riding on the back of the chemical engine was thrown heavily from the vehicle fortunately with only minor injuries.

Upon arrival of the brigade at the scene of a great fire had broken out. Little could be done to save either the premises or contents, and it was but a short while before the whole was but a pile of debris.

Mrs. Anderson was away on a visit and Mr. Anderson had taken the children to the theatre, the house thus being left unoccupied. It is surmised that the fire started from a overheated stovepipe. Some insurance was carried.

Focusing automobile headlights in any desired position is made easy by a portable headlight tester now available for garage.

NAMING OF CREEKS BY OLD PROSPECTORS

TRAPPERS HAD LAND WHEN B.C. WATERWAYS WERE CHRISTENED

VANCOUVER.—To a reflective person passing through British Columbia's diversified out-of-door, this threadbare question is garbed with freshened interest when he ponders on the names given to some of the innumerable streams of the province.

Along the line of the Canadian National Railways there are more than a few Gold, Silver Copper and Queen creeks to show that prospectors had a hand in the christening. There are others of the advance guard of settler named named Salmon and Trout creeks. There are Goat, Kid, Duck, Goose, Sheep (also a Sheppard), Pup, Deer, Grizzly, Silvertip, Bear, Cougar, Whitehouse, Eagle, Marten, Mink, Fish-tail, Caribou, Wolf and Porcupine creeks. There is even an Octopus creek, and a stream called Greasyhill. One wonders who this Greasy Bill was and what he looked like. There are Whitewater, Blackwater, Colchwater, Clearwater, Green and Vermilion creeks. Along the St. Mary's river the creeks on one side were named Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, by a zealous missionary. Later a traveller not quite so devout named the creeks flowing into the river along his side. These names were certainly picturesque, especially the one he dubbed Hot-trout Creek. Priest and Monk creeks are well known. So are Run, Whiskey, Soda, Lemon and Sugar creeks. One finds the Kettle river and Puddingfoot creek, while away north of the Canadian National line west of Jasper Park, in the Stuart Lake country, are the Frypan mountains. There are Snow and Snowball creeks, Slipper creek and Heart and Pork creeks. Also Corn and Blueberry creeks. Then there are Knoll, Rock, Summit, Pyramid, Sand and Lost Lodge creek. This last suggests elusive treasures and an old miner's blighted hopes. But there is a Hope Creek too. Bug Creek seems a good place to stay away from, while Twobit creek suggest small change.

Many of these names were conferred by the questing placer miners of fifty and more years ago and perhaps it is significant of their hopes and disappointments that there is a Sob and a Smile creek. For after all there must be something in a name.

PROVINCE'S BEST GOING TO WORLD CONGRESS

J. TIMINS, SECRETARY OF THE ALBERTA PROVINCIAL POULTRY ASSOCIATION, WHO HAS BEEN APPOINTED BY THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT TO CHOOSE FROM ABOUT 150 ENTRIES THAT HAVE BEEN RECEIVED.

The birds chosen will be sent to Ottawa at the cost of the provincial department of agriculture. In Ottawa the final choice will be made and the birds will then travel to London at the cost of the Dominion department of agriculture.

BAKER SCHOOL BILL THROUGH 2nd READING

MINISTER OF EDUCATION PILOTS MEASURE THROUGH TO FULL COMMITTEE

EDMONTON.—Hon. Perren E. Baker's now famous school bill was safely introduced in committee of the whole assembly of the legislature Thursday afternoon after being given second reading by the minister of education as a result of an unanimous vote.

In closing the debate on second reading Hon. Perren Baker pointed out that the rights of separate schools and the matter of religious instruction in schools, had not been disturbed one way or the other, nor did the bill propose to give greater power to the minister, rather it proposed to transfer those powers of the minister from the district to the division.

Mr. Baker agreed that it might be anomalous for him to support the view that the superintendents and supervisors be appointed by the minister, but wide experience had shown that it was unwise to divorce entirely departmental control from either districts or divisions.

While defending the departmental plan under which the minister would appoint the division superintendents and supervisors, Mr. Baker stated that more efficient and independent work would be obtained in this way rather than allowing the division to appoint those officials.

LOVE FINDS THE WAY

BY MAY EDINGTON

About an hour after the sun had set, when the moon had risen to hang over the placid sea, Sara came out of the farmhouse according to her wont and crossed the two fields to the beach. There she stood, looking and listening, the faint night wind sweeping her dress about her. Her eyes turned and saw the brown hair about her bare head. Behind her the village was settling into sleep. Around her the beach was deserted but for the boats drawn up on the shingle, or putting at their moorings on the edge of the waves. The girl stood motionless looking out to sea.

It was not long before Lawrence came, rounding the headland into the little bay, leisurely and silently save for the rhythmic dipping of the oars. He drove the boat up on the beach, stepped out, and stood looking at the sky and water for a few moments, before he turned around and saw her standing where she had withdrawn under the cliff's shadow, her light cotton gown a milky blur against the darkness.

"You're shiver!" he said with a little laugh. "I hope you might be—as usual—when I came for my night's row. It's becoming a habit—such a pleasant habit—to pull in here on the chance of seeing you. And now you're here we can look together at all that."

"An' you indicated the wide arc of heaven, jeweled with moon and stars, above a waste of sleeping waters, the faintest wind whispering secretly up the beach, and around the rocks and in the crannies. She came forward slowly, a tall, splendidly developed girl, and stood beside him. He stretched out a hand absently—a slim cold hand—look her warm one, and stood with his face still turned toward the sea.

"If I could only get it all on my little canvas of a canvas!" he said presently.

"You do! exclaimed the girl. "You do! Your pictures are the most beautiful, beautiful, BEAUTIFUL!"

He laughed a little, but dependently, and absently squeezed the hand he held. "No they're not beautiful, beautiful BEAUTIFUL as all, not in the very least degree. And nobody knows it better than I. I paint trifles for trifles, and if I stopped turning out my trifles to dare dream of something higher, my bread and butter would stop too. I'm just a potboiler who paints daubs of Phillisides, and perforce, drives away his visions."

"That was declamatory, and she murmured a low passionate protest. "Come and sit down!" said the young man. They found a bench and sat down side by side in silence for a while. She cast little fleeting glances at his face now and again, studying it shyly but passionately. His profile was towards her, a wonderful profile, young, fair, clear cut and classically perfect. His eyes, the most eyes of a visionary, swept the beach, the quiet waters the far sky line, and presently came round to her face, catching her regard, whereas she blushed from brow to chin. But bluish or pallor or shame in the moon light, and he did not see that.

"Has anyone ever told you what an excellent bettor you are?" he said quizzically. "No, I don't suppose so. There wasn't anyone to appreciate you about here, until I came."

She trembled a little and quivered into a smile. He saw her white teeth flash, and ran on. "Absolutely the only fellow-son in the community and what luck to happen upon you directly! I drifted down here! Yes a fellow soul! An affinity, that is what I have found you! Mamma in my wildernesses! He was speaking lightly easily, but he was thinking her. "I find you a little out of your element though; I can't understand why you are a vegetable on this little patch. Do you really think you were designed for a farmer?"

"I like it," said Sarah, her roughened hand trembling a little in his smooth one.

"It is my work, you see. When my father died he left me the work to do for my mother. After all, it's farm work that help to make the landscapes you paint."

The beautiful—beautiful—BEAUTIFUL!—murmured she, and so Sara thinks she has a hand in "realism."

"No, she said simply, 'but I'm one of the gardeners aren't I?'"

"And I only a copyist," he remarked.

His fair face grew a little moody. "I've not shivered to shiver on the rock. He dropped her hand to throw some pebbles out on the sea. They fell, one by one, few splashes of sound breaking the quiet. She folded her hands across her knees and watched him quietly. The sky towered vast and high, not a cloud in it to draw it down to the earth. Under the cotton, between the girls' heads, but tumultuously, and her eyes were rather hungry in her sun-tanned face. The painter flung the pebbles out fretfully one by one, into the waves.

"You were painting the bay here by moonlight," she said compassionately, after a while. "Is it finished on your canvas yet?"

He turned a suddenly eager face. "Finished? Yes, thank goodness! That's real genuine sear, Sara. I want to tell you about that picture. I painted away at it for a whole fortnight, tore up my canvas and began again—on the wings of a new inspiration—your!"

"You—yes, Priscilla Farmer Sara—Priscilla Sara. I've found you so often down here sketching, you know when I have rowed in for my moonlight efforts. Just as tonight, and you. Your days work ended the laborer wearying their weary way the chimes washed and the chimes fell, you came down here to find something a little more reflective, soul satisfying, a little less earthly, a little closer to the sky. That's it, isn't it?"

"It was the sight of you standing looking out to sea that first inspired me," said the artist, blushing his last pebble. "As I rowed in, you stood there, the waves nearly lapping your feet, and the moonlight on your face and hair. I caught the suggestion at once. You may have been considering your last batch of chickens or your autumn painting Farmer Sara but you seemed an embodiment—of how shall I express it?—of steadfastness and passion, yearning and waiting. That's not a glimpse—I don't quite know. But I put you into the picture and I called it 'Hope Eternal' so I finished it, and—"

He turned around, eyes a-fire in his fair face, white teeth flashing. "Listen," he said earnestly. "It's success. I know it! I feel it! It's bound to sell. To sell well? I don't know that. But it's the best thing I have ever done. 'Hope Eternal' and I give you some. I have sent it to a dealer—Gitto and Abrams in the Strand—you wouldn't know—"

She gazed back at him. No she wouldn't know of course. She knew nothing of art and ambitions. She was only a vegetable in this patch.

"What should Farmer Sara know of it?" he said laughing. "Well, I sent the picture to Gitto and Abrams and they will try and dispose of it. I'll send one or two small things for me once. Anyway, it'll be seen—noticed and it will mean other commissions. I know it. It is going to be a stepping stone. And then—"

She breathed: "Then?"

"Then I have a dream!" he said. "I'm sure my woman heart is leaping with probing, quivering, searching and divining that dream, reading the glorious writing of it on rock and sand, sky and deep sea."

He loved her. He had waited for Fortune to smile on him before he would. She had no doubt. It was all sun-clear and beautiful. A minute or two passed in silence, while hope eternal filled both their hearts.

Suddenly she asked: "Would it make you very happy?"

He brought his eyes to her face studying it absently for a moment. "What—the sale of that picture?"

"Yes I suppose it would—that and the consequences."

"Will you let me know—the enjoy of the sweet futility of that question—as soon as the dealers tell you it is sold?"

"You will be the first, the very first, of course."

"That set the seal of accuracy, as it were, on her half fearful divinations of a moment ago. He added: "Who else cares? No one that I know."

"How can they not?" asked Sara in a half whisper. "But I care enough for all."

"How sweet of you!" said the painter. He rose, took her hand and drew her up to him. "Will you walk down to the boat with me? It is time. I went back and you, too, if you are to be up with the lark as usual. Look at the sky Sara. How beautiful! It's rather grand to be here alone together and not another soul awake in the village to listen and understand us. You're shivering! You're cold?"

"No certainly not!" she was trembling a little with happiness and the mysteries which fly abroad at night had taken hold of her.

He pushed the boat off slowly and stepped aboard. The water tinkled from the oars.

"Good night!" he said.

"Good night! Good night!"

She stood there on the waves edge so that they ran up and lapped her feet, looking out after him. The boat glided from her. She called again, softly:

"Good night!"

He was receding, a black speck, toward the headland. She stood nearly five minutes, and looked after him, leaning forward a little over the water, the embodiment of—what was it Lawrence had seen and said?—of steadfastness and passion of yearning and waiting—and that not all!

At the boat was out of sight she was quite alone. She shivered a little again, and turning ran up the beach and across the two fields to the farmhouse. It lay, long low and dark in a sleeping farmyard, a light at one upper window only. Her moth as was in bed and the lighted window was her own.

She sat herself in a moment, bolted the door, and crept upstairs to her own white room under the eaves. She shut the door, came forward to the looking-glass, by which a candle burnt, and, looking her hair down on the dressing-table, gazed absently upon herself.

That was the face Lawrence loved. He was not waiting to sell that picture and then—he had a dream she breathed in long sighs and began slowly to pull off the cotton bodice and take the first one of the long hair.

It fell in dark rolls upon her shoulder and white neck, above which the face was sun-kissed red and brown. She stared at the reflection that radiated stranger. They were fleeting markings flashes in her cheeks and the slender, slender, the vision of woman that love in her eyes. She talked softly under her breath and laughed a little from pure exultation.

Two weeks passed and there was no news of the picture, the painter wandering about the neighborhood much, sitting, standing, sketching, and complete rubbish—and spoke bitterly to Sara of the world's ingratitude. She ran down to the shore at nights and sometimes he came and sometimes he did not.

During the day, having to be up with the lark, she grew a little pale and weary, apt to chide her weary mother; but as the evening drew on the awake shook off her weariness and her tongue ran honey and she loved every man and beast, woman and child within her radius.

Her whims passed for nothing but youthful restlessness with the stolid folk about the farm. After the early supper when the drowsy mother began to nod—

"I'll run out and shut up the chicken, she would say, and maybe go down to the beach and get a whiff of the sea. You go to bed—masterfully and don't wait up for me."

So two weeks went by and the young painter passed alternately from hope to despair—was fierce, sorrowful, baffled, beaten, resentful and nothing, by turns, and she, not psychologist enough to read and weigh at their proper value the fluctuations of a temperament such as his, reflected him and waned and waned with him.

Perhaps Lawrence, singularly blind to the beauties of Nature when expressed in this woman-guide read very little of it at all.

"No news of the picture," he said when on one of those withering calm serene nights they met as usual by the sea. "No news. It is the best I have ever done and I hear as the dealers shop while fools pass it by. And I down here, wait and watch and work—but how can a man work on the rack?—and eat my heart out in the waiting?"

"You know how I'd hoped for it," he went on, turning to her. "I know!" she murmured.

And her heart was torn between her fierce sorrow for him and his joy at what she knew.

"Two weeks—near three!" said Lawrence wretchedly, "and not a line. Heaven knows how I spent myself in the painting that picture. For a fortnight Sara, I barely left it. And not a line not a word!"

The Only Larks in America

Fifteen minutes car drive from the Empress Hotel, Victoria, is the only colony of skylarks on the north of the city, on the slopes of Mt. Tolmie, at the Colwood Golf course, among the orchards of Gordon Head, in the deep meadows near Elk Lake, and from the flower-scented grounds of Butchart's Gardens. Photographs show the Gardens with larks seen in this one section of the Dominion, have been acclimated at Victoria successfully. They are of the English skylark.

Love Finds A Way

He stood up before her, hatless—he always roved bareheaded at night—pressed his two hands to his fair head and dropped them again. The edginess of the gesture, coming easily from him, smote and frightened her. She dropped sitting on the rocks.

"It will be sold," she said faintly. "Heavens knows! replied Lawrence miserably. 'I've had, always had, this picture. No good thing has ever come my way yet. But I had hoped dreamed, trusted in—nearly prayed for—this picture. I don't think you can understand how.'"

Did she not? Her light feet dragged over the fields home that night and carried her weightily upstairs to the white room over the canoe. She dropped into the chair before her looking glass without glancing into it, and had a awful face down on her arms. He was disappointed, unhappy, despairing of his dream. She too, therefore.

She sat there, still, and a wonderful little possibility crept whispering to her in the silence. She listened to it. It grew louder with added boldness at her acquiescence, and clamored in her ears. It said—

The candle had guttered down nearly to the socket. Sara rose bright-eyed and pale, to open a drawer. There she rummaged for and found a small black shiny book. She opened it and pored over it.

It was studded with clear black figures which were to elucidate this mystery, bring happiness for pain, pass a dream to its fulfillment. All that the little ghost of possibility had whispered into her ears. She had listened and worked. She pored over her own private bank book.

It showed a clear balance of two hundred pounds. That represented so much nursing of invalid calves, so much parsimonious counting of eggs, and raising of chickens and other of Farmers care full small economies. She was a quick shrewd business woman who, of necessity had learnt to take care of the halfpence so that now they tottered up to two hundred pounds.

She stood in the middle of the room a moment, and clasped the bank-book to her breast. It represented in the lists it stood a very poor chance as a great deal to her but with Love in the tourney. It was hardly a moment that the conflict of arguments dashed in her brain. She sat down; she cried with joy. She found pen and paper and wrote:

To Messrs. Giotto and Abrams,

Picture Dealers,
Strand, W. C.

Dear Sirs:—
You have, I believe a picture called 'Hope Eternal' by R. Lawrence, which I wish to purchase. I offer two hundred pounds for it and enclose a check. This I desire you to forward to Mr. Lawrence without delay minus your own commission.

She paused to bite her pen and think. A tear fell on the paper—but it was a jewel of happiness. She brushed it away.

Will you send the picture at once to my address? Do not tell Mr. Lawrence the name of the purchaser. If he enquires merely say that a great admirer of his work....

More gains came then but laughter too. The delicious irony of that!.... a great admirer of his work and wishes to remain anonymous, has bought it.

I remain your faithfully
(Miss) Sara Fenwick
Fenwick's Farm
Muscombe-on-Sea
Devon.

She could write a business letter. She had translated her own business for two years. She sat back and looked at her handiwork. The candle was nearly expiring, but there was light enough to fill in the check. She would have it all done on the spot.

She pulled aside the blind and a full white room looked in over the cornfields and flooded the little room with light touching chair and table, mirror and bed, making it a silver palace in which she was the regnant supremely happy princess. She slept with the letter, that tall man under her pillow.

Two days passed and she went daily about her house and farm. When she saw Lawrence on the beach she met his impatience and reproaches with hope cheer and laughter. She seemed an incarnate breath of all three. Tomorrow the picture would be hers, to be gloated over secretly but hidden away until—

Until she had no secrets from him for tomorrow night he would row in to the shore where she waited for him and tell her all that was in his heart. An 'Open Sesame' had been spoken to unlock the gates thereof. He had felt the searing of this picture would be the turning point of his fortunes.

It's going to be a stepping stone and then—
"Then?"

"Then—I have a dream...."
By and by, perhaps months later she might tell him what she had done. It would not matter then. It would not be difficult to bring the picture to him put an arm about his neck and a cheek to his and say: 'Dear I bought it and you don't mind. For I bought our happiness with it.' Tomorrow!

It was quite late the next evening when the picture came. There was no time to unwrap it before early supper and she hardly cared. She carried it upstairs and laid it on her bed, her one thought was: 'He will have received the check by this time. He will come tonight and tell me—'

That was what her heart sang. She laughed through super, brilliant cheeks and star-eyed, and she said to her mother masterfully.

"I'm going out—down to the sea for a breath of air. Don't wait up for me. I shan't be long."

Then she ran out past the line of white chicken coops. It was a hot night, full of fragrance with all the mysteries abroad. The full silver moon sailed high and splendid overhead. Behind her the village was settling into sleep, and before her stretched the illumined sea.

Very soon Lawrence's boat flicked its clear expanse, gliding round the headland with measured dip of oars and shivering the long ripples of light that lay along the waters as it cleaved through. Three centuries of minutes crawled by after he came into sight, before the boat's keel grated on the beach.

He sprang out and ran over the few yards of shingle to her.

"Sara! News!" he cried.
She had herself in hand her leaping heart tremulously quivered, the breaking smiles sternly repressed about her quivering mouth. She was ready to simulate surprise—congratulation—friendly gladness a anything. But she was so fearful that her face carried transparently her secret.

He seized both her hands, which fluttered to his by their own sub-consciousness—held them—wrung them.

"It's sold!"
She said faintly: "The picture? I'm so glad, so glad! But I told you all the time it would be—I—I feel certain of it. Who has bought it?"

Then he could answer jubilantly (as she had imagined him doing) 'An anonymous admirer! Fancy that! I didn't know I had such a one or any one at all. Sara, my dear little friend you don't know what this means to me! You don't know!'

She was suddenly afraid with the sweetest possible fear and wanted to put it off for a moment or two—the close impending declaration, the avowal, the ultimate happiness.

"Tell me about it," she faltered.

"An anonymous admirer. You—you must have a great many. I have always told you so you know. Tell me when you heard—and—"

He was standing close still holding her hand the moonlight lighting up his eager white face with the fair hair tossed temptuously back from the wide forehead. She had her rapier regard on it.

"I heard this morning," he said. "Guess the amount! Two hundred pounds! Two hundred pounds! I did not expect a quarter. I nearly came away to tell you at once but there were other things to be done first. I'll tell you of them—all I have thought of and have been doing since it happened. I knew I would be certain to find you here tonight, watching and thinking, Farmer Sara!"

He drew her back to the rocks. "Let us sit down for a few moments he said."

Sara trembled from head to foot. The young painter at her side was looking out over the beautiful sea as if, visionary that he was, he read his future brightly.

"Directly I had that check, and realized my luck, what do you think I did?" he asked.
"I don't know, she breathed.
"I tried to make arrangements for starting south tomorrow—"

"You travel," he said excitedly. That has been my hopeless dream for years. To give myself a chance. See Rome Naples, Florence. To put myself to school. To go to the homes of Art. All my life I have been so handicapped, I've never had the money—never had made a price before for anything—not half a quarter of it."

"The other day I mused at the fools who passed my work by but it must be a fool who bought it for two hundred pounds! Never mind. Suffer such fools gladly! Well, so I have, my chance. Imagine it, Sara! I know your sympathy now. How quiet you are! The good listener!"

She was quite silent. He ran on: "Rome, Venice, Florence. And after that six months or a year in the Paris ateliers. Transcendent! See what a happy aim of two hundred pounds will do for a man! Here are the chances the environment, that an artist must have, placed to my hand. And I shall be working all the time, you know too. Pot boiling. How quiet you are! Congratulate me!"

"I—I—she stammered and then stopped, because it was not possible to go on sitting shoulder to shoulder with him like this. But he hardly waited for it after all. He had risen, and was saying:

"But I cannot stop. I am packing my traps for I start tomorrow morning early. I'll send you a line sometimes, if you would care to hear."
"You know I—that is—I should—"

"I shan't forget Farmer Sara," he said lightly, his dreaming eyes roaming the horizon. "I'll send you a line and tell you what I am doing, in a month or two. (He forgot it though) Well so it is good-bye."

She was sitting on the rock. She did not move.

"Good-bye," she answered. Her voice faltered, died on the word. She could not look up.

"Won't you walk down to the boat for the last time?"
It would have been impossible.

"I'm rather tired," she said. "I—"

He nodded, turned away and was half way down the beach when some thing stopped him making him look back. She was sitting there bowed. He went back slowly and stood beside her.

"We have been quite good friends," he said on the thought. "May I—may we not say good-bye rather—differently?"

She got up then. He took her hand and kissed her cheek.
Her heart waited a passionate dirge of 'stay' and 'stay' but her lips were locked, as an unsought woman must be. She turned her head suddenly, so that for a moment her lips met his.

"Good-bye," she said fiercely, and ran from him up the beach. The splash of his oars followed her, in a moment or two as he rowed out. She thrust her fingers into her drumming ears and ran on.

She gained the farm with incredible swiftness and hid herself in it. She was alone once more in the white room under the eaves and the brown unwrapped that, dry-eyed propped it on the mantelpiece and stared at it, and from it of her own wild wan reflection in the glass.

"You fool!" she said loudly.

AREAS FREED OF BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS
One million, four hundred and sixty-nine thousand, seven hundred and sixty-nine cattle had been tested for the disease of tuberculosis by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa up to the eighth of October last. The work of testing was commenced as a policy by the Health of Animals Branch of the Department early in 1915 and as a result the cattle in fourteen extensive areas have been declared free of this disease.

In a pamphlet, "Bovine Tuberculosis" issued by the department the different plans for dealing with this policy are described, reasons are given for pursuing the work, and the locations of the cleaned up areas geographically defined.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION

In the rebuilding of Wainwright, as far as the country women are concerned, the most important feature has been the installation of a splendid rest room by the Safeway store which they say they have installed particularly for the "country women"I am sure that I voice the appreciation of every woman from the country district surrounding Wainwright, not only for the thoughtfulness on the part of the store management, but for the considerable expense they were willing to stand in order that Wainwright might have what is such a crying necessity and yet so woefully lacking in almost every town—"A restroom for the country woman"
Mrs Frank E. DixonTwenty-five cents a gas for twenty years comes to over eighteen hundred dollars—without interest being computed. The man of fifty who has saved this amount daily since he was a boy of ten, probably has pretty close to $7,600.00 safely tucked away for the retiring sixteen, non-productive seventies and eighties, while the housewife who may be able to save only for thirty years, has also a sum that is not to be laughed at.

GARDENS FOR KIDDIES

Teach your children to care for the tiny plants in a garden that is their very own. Even though you have but a small plot of ground, you can surely set aside a tiny patch for each of the children.

It may be six feet square, or only four. It may be ten or twelve. But no matter how large it is, teach the children how to loosen the soil, sift in ashes if needed, smooth it down, and plant the seed.

Teach them to care for the tiny plants when they come up, to water them, weed them, and shelter them during heavy winds or storms. Let them compete with each other—seeing who can grow the first radish of edible size, who can furnish mother with the first mess of peas or lettuce or who can bring an ear of corn to dad first.

They will learn to love the soil and the vegetables it produces, as millions of their adults love it. By all means let the children have a garden.

DIPHTHERIA IS PREVENTABLE

If diphtheria is preventable, then why there any diphtheria is a question which anyone would naturally ask. Is it because parents do not care whether or not their children become ill, suffer and sometimes die? No one is indifferent to the sufferings of children. Is it then because parents are completely ignorant of the fact that diphtheria can be prevented, or else, that having heard such to be the case, they have not realized that their child might be a victim of the disease.

It is likely that this lack of understanding regarding the personal application of such statements, to which may be added the human tendency to procrastinate, is responsible for the failure of parents to do what is apparently so obviously the thing to do. We read and we are told about something like diphtheria immunization, but it never quite strikes home that this has anything to do directly with us and with our children; it is something of general good, but the personal implication is not grasped. If it is seen as a personal matter, how often the carrying out of the good intent is put off. There is no immediate need, no real hurry, no imminent danger, and so next week becomes next month, and next month becomes next year.

Diphtheria is not only preventable it has been prevented in several of the communities where the people, in general, have become aroused and have done this very thing. Hamilton is a striking example to show that what we are talking about is a practical measure on a community-wide basis. There is on reason why the same success cannot be attained all over Canada. There is no reason why diphtheria should not be a very rare disease. It is quite within the bounds of realization to see the diphtheria wards in our isolation hospitals closed.

It all comes back to the individual home, to the individual parents. Upon their action as individuals depends whether or not these possibilities are made realities. The responsibility is a personal one which cannot be passed on to other shoulders. The protection of your children rests upon you and no one else. Health Departments may aid you in meeting your responsibilities by providing the facilities, but that is to help parents to do their duty, not to relieve them of it.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

UTILIZING THE BACK YARD

It is doubtful if Joyce Kilmer realized how famous a certain little poem would make him, when he first penned the lines "Poems are made by fools like me, but only God can make a tree."

But that little poem is one of the classics of today. It struck a heart string that seems to be almost universal. Even those of us who have never owned a garden seem to have a craving to grow things. It may be a plant in the window of our dining room; a cluster of vines in water; something green, or golden, or red on the window ledge or the veranda; or it may be a larger assortment of growing things in the spot of ground that runs from the garage to the back door of our home.

We do not attempt to make a tree but we use the God-given seed and our God-given strength to plant that seed—and as the days pass and the seed grows, we secure a delight that is almost unexpressed. The tiny backyard may be turned into a garden, no matter where it may be located nor how littered up it may be at present. A little ashlea will loosen the vilest clay. A little fertilizer will fill barren soil with the power of producing plants and fruits. A little toil in that backyard and the expenditure of a very few dollars, indeed, will enable you to produce vegetables for your own table, or to present to some loved friend with the assurance that they have been grown by you.

What Shall We
Name The Baby?

A SYMPOSIUM BY INTERESTING PEOPLE OF TODAY
CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM A. LEWIN

To select a suitable name for each new baby that comes into the world is indeed an absorbing problem. Nearly 2,000,000 new babies were born last year. And yet there are less than 1,000 names to choose from. Parents search telephonic directories for suggestions. Shall we create some interesting new names?

No 2.—AMELITA GALLICURCI

It seems to me that aside from the fact that parents might wish to perpetuate a name that has already been used in the family, it all depends upon the last name. It must be a name that will combine well with the last name. For example, if the last name is Stone, no first name that ends in "s" (James, Willis, etc.) will combine well with it as it does not pronounce well. Likewise, a name like George will not pronounce well with it where as a name like "Marvin" rolls together easily with it. If the last name pronounces in one syllable, the first name should have two; conversely, if the last name is a long one, the first name should be short, unless a first name is chosen which does not duplicate any of the syllables of the last name, for example, "Raymond Hitchcock" (very good). There are exceptions to this in case one wishes to use a name which starts with the same letter as the last name, in which case the alliteration is effective and JOHN is a name of Hebrew origin meaning "the Lord's grace." It is generally regarded as the most common of all masculine names. One of the saints and twenty-three popes have borne this name, as well as several kings. The name of John Smith, famous English adventurer and colonist, has been borne by many thousands of others. The Cathedral of St. John the divine in New York City immortalizes the name John.

SARAH is a name of Hebrew origin meaning "princess." It is the name of a famous character in the bible and Sally are contract forms. Sarah Bernhardt, the famous French actress, was called "Dainty Sarah."

Gallie of Canada has celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. Its birth in 1880 as the Canadian Academy of Arts was an epochal event in the national life. The Marquis of Lorne was Governor-General at that time, and at the first exhibition bought five pictures for $900.

OTTAWA, Canada.—Dr. Ludwig von Kleinwachter, the first consul-general of Austria to be assigned to Canada, has taken up his duties. He hopes his efforts will contribute toward the development of a greater reciprocal trade.

Stricken Lumberjack Transported Over Roadless Snows to Hospital.

CHARBONNEAU'S camp on the St. Lawrence is a long way from town. It is not so far as the crown line, only 40 miles separating it from Sturgeon Falls. But, when the great white rattle sweeps down from the waters to the north, Charbonneau and his men might as well be above the Arctic Circle so far as contact with the outside world is concerned. The coming of winter always has meant complete isolation for the stalwart band of lumberjacks who smoke and cajole and sleep and eat and sometimes work the wintry months away.

True, Sturgeon Falls lies only 60 miles distant. But such a 60 miles! No road leads from camp to town. Even in summer, it is only a trail, blazed through the bush, that links one with the other. And a chain of five lakes scatter themselves in such way that, winter or summer, the going forms anything but a pleasure jaunt. But, when a bunk-mate goes "mail," the complacency of Charbonneau's winter camp is disturbed. And when his bunk-mate has the chance of getting to a hospital and surgeon, over lakes and roadless trails piled high with snow and slush, every mother's son in camp declares excitedly that something must be done. A litter, carried by his comrades? They never could make it. Besides, the sick one would not survive the strain.

CANDY CREAMS

The last ingredients many might think of adding to a cream pudding would be candy. Yet many kinds of candies lend themselves to the dessert in a surprising manner—and as they add a touch of quick energy food to the dessert, a great deal is to be said in favor of this addition. Here are two particularly tasteful dessert dishes in which candy appears try them and see how flavorful they are:

Candy Bar Cottage Pudding

Out cake into squares or use cup cakes. Cover with very thin slices of candy bar. Pour hot custard or sauce over it. Two layers of cake with slices of candy bar between as well as on top makes a Cottage Sandwich Pudding.

Peppermint Stick Ice Cream

One-half pound peppermint sticks, one pint milk, one quart medium cream, one half teaspoon salt. Soak candy overnight in the milk. Add the cream, salt, and sugar if you want it, and freeze.

GARNISH HINT

No one would think of serving fish without lemon; but it is possible to forget that lemon garnish is as useful as well as ornamental. If it is desirable to achieve a decorative effect—to cut the slices into odd shapes and sprinkle them with paprika or parsley—show your patrons the cost of providing an additional dish or quartered lemons so they the juice may be easily squeezed on to the fish.

ECONOMY MEAT PIE

Out left-over meat and vegetables into uniform medium-sized pieces. Mix with an equal amount of medium cream sauce (1 cup milk, 2 table spoons flour, 2 tablespoons butter). Season well with pepper salt onion, etc. (Use left-over gravy with cream sauce if possible). Cover with a thick pie crust biscuit dough, or layer of left-over mashed potato mixed with milk (one slightly beaten egg can be added to potato if desired). Bake in a moderate oven until the crust is cooked, or until browned and heated through if potato is used.

MARSHMALLOW SURPRISE

1 package chocolate junket
1 pint milk
1 pound marshmallows
1 cup confectioner's sugar
1 cup boiling water

Prepare chocolate junket according to directions on package. Cut marshmallows in pieces and melt in double boiler. Dissolve sugar in boiling water, add to marshmallows, and stir until thoroughly blended. Turn into a bowl and cool before serving on top ice cold chocolate junket.

VEAL A LA KING

2 pounds lean veal
1/2 cup butter
6 carrots
2 onions
1 bay leaf
4 cloves
1 quart cream
1 sweet pepper
1 can mushroom
1 can sifted peas
2 cans noodles

Two pounds lean veal—trim off all fat and cut into cubes about one inch square. Brown slightly in 1/2 cup butter. Add water to cover well. Add 6 medium-sized carrots, 2 medium-sized onions cut up, 1 sweet pepper, 1 bay leaf, 4 cloves and boil together until meat is tender. (Do not let water boil down—add enough to keep about 1 pint of liquid.) Add 1 quart of sweet cream which has previously been heated to boiling point, then cream for gravy and add one can mushrooms cut up, 1 can sifted peas salt to taste. Add 1/2 teaspoon paprika. Serve on chow mein noodles.

BREAD PUDDING DESSERT

Altho that is needed for this dessert is a pint of milk, four slices of bread a package of lemon junket, a little butter and a few raisins. Remove crusts from bread, butter lightly and cut in small cubes. Divide the cubed bread among dessert dishes and add a few seeded or seedless raisins. Warm the milk to lukewarm—not hot. Add the lemon junket, stir until dissolved. Pour over bread. Let stand in a warm place until firm—about ten minutes—then chill. Sprinkle with a mixture of sugar and cinnamon before serving.

RASPBERRY JAM DELIGHT

Take the lemon junket recipe imaginable. Prepare a package of raspberry junket according to directions on package. When ice cold, garnish with raspberry jam. The jam, the junket and a pint of milk are the only ingredients that call for an out lay from the family purse.

DOES MAN SETTLE UP OR DOWN ?

WHEN MAN REACHES THAT STAGES IN HIS EXISTENCE WHERE THE URGE FOR "HOME" DOMINATES HIS THOUGHTS HE IS SUFFERING THE FIRST STAGES OF THE "SETTLING DOWN" PROCESS. HE BEGINS PLANNING A HOUSE AND ALL THAT GOES WITH IT, AND REALIZES THAT BEFORE HE CAN SETTLE DOWN AND BECOME A SOLID CITIZEN HE MUST "SETTLE UP."

NOW THIS "SETTLING UP" BUSINESS SHOULD BE INDULGED IN AT REGULAR INTERVALS BY MOST OF US. THERE'S ALWAYS SOME LITTLE ACCOUNT THAT IF NOT PAID PROMPTLY WHEN NOTICE IS SENT, WILL BE ALLOWED TO STAND INDEFINITELY. ONE OF THE MOST UNFORTUNATE IN THIS RESPECT IS THE SUBSCRIPTION TO THE NEWSPAPER. THE AMOUNT IS SMALL AND COMES DUE BUT ONCE A YEAR; SO IT IS EASILY FORGOTTEN. BUT WHEN A THOUSAND OR SO SUBSCRIBERS "FORGET" THE PUBLISHER IS IN A BAD WAY AND IMMEDIATELY HAS TO PUT ON PRESSURE TO COLLECT THE TWO DOLLAR ACCOUNT.

THERE IS ONE SURE WAY OF KEEPING "SETTLED UP" WITH YOUR NEWSPAPER—WATCH THE LABEL EVERY WEEK. AFTER YOUR NAME THE DATE ON WHICH YOUR SUBSCRIPTION EXPIRES IS PRINTED PLAINLY. PAY IT PROMPTLY WHEN IT COMES DUE. MAKE SURE OF IT NOW.

POINTS TO REMEMBER

Among the things everyone might well remember are:
That your watch needs cleaning once a year.
That it should be inspected by the jeweler every six months.
That water is not good for the movement.
That shocks and jars to your watch should be avoided.
That the watch should be wound up regularly, preferably, each morning at the same time.
That the watch should be kept in an upright position.
That it should be used as a time-piece and not for a hammer or paper weight.
That a watch with ordinary care will last indefinitely.

MILK AND THE CHILD

All mammal babies human and otherwise, live the first few weeks or months of their life on milk alone. It is a complete food in itself. It contains all the constituents necessary to preserve life, so that it is a very necessary part of the daily diet, especially for children. Yet there are children who do not drink milk—children one will say of poor homes where the financial circumstances do not permit of milk. That is so, unfortunately, but there are other children who are not given milk, not because it is impossible to buy it, but because the parents do not know enough to give it, or, knowing, are too lazy to make the effort to make the milk palatable.

The winter has seen on too many occasions a tin of Nestle's milk on farm house dining tables. The one place where fresh rich milk should have been forthcoming.

The young stock were given milk calves, pigs, turkeys and chickens, even the cats, but the farmers children were fed from a tin. Milk is as necessary and can be given in so many palatable ways, that all children can eat and enjoy it. It is a very short-sighted policy to deprive the growing boy or girl of a food that assists so materially in that growth.

Why give more thought to the young stock than to your boy or girl? Literature on Milk and Milk dishes can be obtained free from the Canadian Red Cross, 407 Civic Block, Edmonton.

SOME SUGGESTION FOR THE HOUSEHOLD

Will Keep Their Stiffness
If the starched clothes should be caught on the line in a shower, do not take them down, but let them remain until dry and they will retain their original stiffness.

Clean and Shiny
It is well to keep a small bottle of kerosene in the bathroom closet to use for a final polish to the bathtub. It will give the porcelain a gloss that can never be attained with the usual cleansers.

Sleep, Baby, Sleep
One mother, whose baby rebelled at being put to bed at a regular time for a nap, tried turning on the radio and found it produced almost instant slumber. She soon had an established time for sleeping, set to the tune of the music. It won't hurt to give it a trial the next time you have trouble.

The Child's Party
An entertaining centerpiece for the table at the children's party is a large imitation pie made out of card board. Inside the pie is a toy or a game for each child, with a string attached leading to the child's place at the table. At a signal the strings are pulled and the favors come into view.

Will Keep Better
Remove all leaves of flowers that would be under water when put into a vase. The flowers will keep much better if this is done, and if the vase is a glass one, it will mean much clearer water.

Easily Removed
Don't be alarmed when friend has hand splashes paint on your windows, for it can be removed when still wet with a cloth dipped in turpentine, and if dry will come off easily with one of his safety blades.

Those Overall
The only successful way to wash overalls and still keep one's good disposition is to lay them on the washboard, soap them well and scrub hard with a scrubbing brush. They may be soaked well before the scrubbing to loosen the dirt.

Wet Shoes
Wet shoes should be removed as quickly as possible and their toes stuffed with tissue paper as soon as removed. Do not put on fresh when so wet as they are apt to stretch the leather and spoil the shape. Do not dry too quickly as to do so tends to stiffen the leather.

Empty Cartons
Keep a couple of empty cartons around to use under the hot saucepan as it comes from the stove. Then the food will cook without injury to the table top.

Indoor Hanging
So often it is necessary to hang clothes in the cellar during the spring months. If two lines are strung evenly about two feet apart you will find the clothes can very successfully be dried by pinning one side to one line and the other side of the garment to the other. A great many clothes can be accommodated in a little space and they dry very quickly and in good shape.

What to Do About It
Soda and water are the best cleansers for the refrigerator.
Heat the knife that is to be used to cut hot sauce or pickles.
Root vegetables will keep better on the floor of cold cellar or larder.
For the very best results, linoleum should be cemented to the kitchen floor.

Don't pour water on burning fat. Smother it with flour or an old carpet. Water will spread the flames.
Out-of-date magazines would be a joy to the little girl who lives near you who is just at the paper doll stage.

A FABLE

(From the Department of Health)
Once upon a time there was a city with a street running along a high cliff. In dark and stormy weather so many people were injured by falling over the cliff that the citizens gathered together to see what they could do about it. After much debate they decided to increase their taxes and build a hospital at the foot of the cliff so the injured might receive immediate attention.

Now it chanced that a great physician visited the city and the official showed him the hospital with great pride. But he, looking up at the cliff said: "Wouldn't it have been better to build a wall along the cliff so the people couldn't fall off?"
MORAL: Prevention is better than cure, and much cheaper in lives and money. Are you vaccinated? Are your children immunized against diphtheria? Is your milk pasteurized? Do you know that your water-supply is safe?
